CHAPMAN HOME RAZED BY FIRE LATE SATURDAY

RESIDENCE ON EAST WASHINGTON STREET WAS BADLY DAMAGED BY FIRE.

FIRST CALL AT 5:30 O'CLOCK

Pumper Of Fire Department Was Kept In Action For Hour And A Half. $3,000 Damage.

The entire second floor and attic and a part of the first floor of the Mrs. Nathan E. Chapman residence on east Washington street was razed by fire late Saturday afternoon in one of the largest conflagrations in Greencastle for a number of months.

The total damage was estimated at approximately $3,000. The house was badly damaged. The call was received by the Greencastle firemen about 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon and they returned to the fire department building about 9:30 o'clock after fighting the blaze for several hours.

All but fifty feet of the hose, carried in the truck, was used, as one line, a thousand foot stretch was necessary to reach the house from the nearest water plug. The pumper was kept in action for an hour and a half, with the water being constantly played on the burning home until the last blaze was extinguished.

It was thought that the fire started as a result of a defective flue in the west side of the house and that it had burned on the inside for some time before it was noticed.

Fire marshal John Goddard stated that a call was received at the department about 5:30 o'clock and that the person putting in the call neglected to say where the fire was. Goddard said that he called back to the operator and the place was located. When the firemen reached the scene of the conflagration the flames were many feet in the air and the structure seemed doomed.

Firemen, neighbors and others attracted by the blaze, removed practically all of the furniture and household articles from the first floor and part of the furniture kept on the second floor before the heat became too intense.

The four regular firemen and three called in firemen had charge of the fire fighting forces.

MOTHERS' DAY PROGRAMS AT ALL CHURCHES

SERVICES HELD AT GREENCASTLE CHURCHES AS PART OF NATIONAL PROGRAM.

SERVICES WELL ATTENDED

"In The Place of Honor," Was Title of Sermon By Rev. Raphael At Presbyterian Church.

The annual Mothers' day services were observed in Greencastle churches at all services Sunday. The themes of the sermons was built on the celebration of this day.

The program in Greencastle was a part of the national observance of the day.

The Presbyterian Church.

"In the Place of Honor," was the theme of the Mothers' Day morning service in the Presbyterian Church. Rev. V. L. Raphael used as his text 1 Kings 2:19—"King Solomon rose up to meet Bathsheba.... and caused a throne to be set for the king's mother; and she sat on his right hand." The incident forming the basis of this message is unusually appropriate for the occasion as we are observing today. The setting is the throne room of King Solomon noted for its royal splendor through all the ages. The leading characters are the king and his mother. Bathsheba has come to ask a favor of her son not for herself but for another. The great Solomon, seeing her approaching, rises to meet her and bows himself unto her. He further commands that a place be made for his mother at his right side. There is something so beautiful in this ancient oriental scene that it claims and holds our attention.

It seems as if we have here a picture representative of human life. Though her boy had become the ruler of the people, and in fact, of herself as one of them, yet he recognized in his mother a power superior to himself. How true this should be of every youth and man, no matter how many honors are acquired or how much gold accumulated. Forgetfulness of this is dangerous to one's character. Solomon's act of obedience to his mother signified how much he honored her above himself. Perhaps there were those among his attendants, courtiers and others who made light of his words and actions. If that is true, then he deserves all the more consideration for his noble attitude. The tendency, as the child passes through youth and then to manhood, is to shake off the maternal restraint. There is a feeling that she is too old-fashioned, too conservative, too puritanical. However, her teachings have laid the foundations and built the superstructure of American life.

Let us do as Solomon did in his day, set a throne for the mothers that the proper honor may be shown them. How it must have inspired Bathsheba to be given a place at her son's right hand—the location of influence and power. It is surely true that America's prestige among the nations depends somewhat at least on the position and reverence it gives to its mothers. Many of the Proverbs which are attributed to Solomon are instructions on the part of the wise man addressed to "my son" relative to his attitude toward his parents. They bear out what he actually practiced in his own life. Man's moral fibre and spiritual nature are of finer texture according to the position he gives to woman. He needs the idealism of fine women to cultivate his mind and heart in the right direction. Compelling obedience and reverence by force seldom pays and brings little if any good results. It is the pouring out of love in daily sacrifice that brings devotion to a mother's ideals through a life time, even from generation to generation. The law in the Decalogue concerning the relation of children to parents begins with the word "Honor" rather than "Thou shalt not" which emphasizes the point just made.

The auditorium of the First Christian Church was filled Sunday morning for the special Mothers' Day program which was given by the Bible School and the Church. Mrs. A. O. White, president of the Women's Bible Class presided. Tributes were given by each Department in the School, the choir gave a special number and Mrs. Crosby sang solo. Mr. Bruner spoke briefly on the subject, "The Treasure of A Mother's Heart", and pointed out the fact that the mother's heart is the greatest treasure house in the world. He urged the juniors and the young people to honor their mothers. He said, "Mother treasures up everything her children do and say, and it depends largely upon you whether in days to come the treasures of her heart are things that make her happy or things that make her sad." The center section was reserved for the mothers and a large number were present.

SMALL CROP IS REPORTED

ONLY 791,000 ACRES OF WINTER WHEAT LEFT FOR HARVEST IN INDIANA.

Only 791,000 acres of winter wheat are left for harvest in Indiana, the smallest wheat acreage since the Civil War, according to the state crop report released today by the department of agricultural statistics of the Purdue University agricultural experiment station, working in cooperation with the U. S. Department of Agriculture. A loss of 65 per cent of the winter wheat crop sown in the state during the past season is reported, the highest percentage of loss since reports have been compiled.

A total of 1,569,000 acres seeded has been abandoned, the largest loss of acreage in the history of the state with the exception of 1900, when it was slightly exceeded, but in that year there was a much larger acreage sown. Comments generally indicate that the loss has been due to sharp drops in temperature, reaching or going below zero, following precipitation which came as rain instead of snow. Apparently little of the loss has been due to heaving, which in other years has proven destructive.

The reported crop condition of 52 per cent is the lowest since 1912. The condition indicates a yield of 10 bushels per acre on the acreage still standing, or 7,910,000 bushels of wheat compared with 27,621,000 last year and a ten year average of 31,881,000 bushels.

Rye is also reported low, 61 per cent of a normal, lower by 15 points than that of 1899 and 1904, which are the next lowest in the past forty years. The indicated yield from this condition is 916 bushels per acre, compared with 13.6 last year and a ten year average of 13.7. The production forecast is 806,000 bushels compared with 1,618,000 bushels last year and the ten year average of 3,483,000 bushels.

POISONING BY RADIUM SEALS FATE OF GIRLS

FIVE WOMEN SLOWLY DYING MOST PAINFUL AND SURE DEATH.

SCIENTISTS ARE BAFFLED

Former Employees of Radium Corporation Wet Brushes With Lips Seven or Eight Years Ago.

ORANGE, N. J., May 14. (UP)—While the scientific world looks on helplessly, five former New Jersey factory girls are dying slow and painful deaths. Science has dispaired of saving them and Jersey justice has been unable thus far to comfort the last days of their lives.

The strange death sentence, which has been passed on Miss Grace Fyer, Mrs. Albina Larice and Mrs. Quinta McDonald of Orange, and Mrs. Edna Hussman of Hillsdale and Miss Katherine Schaub of Newark, as a result of radium poisoning.

Physicians know something of the curative powers of radium but they know nothing about treating the effects of radium poisoning. The malady in the case of the factory women was contracted between 1917 and 1920 when they were employed by the United States Radium Corporation, painting watch dials to make them luminous.

All of them painted 250 watches a day, wetting the brushes with their lips between strokes. In that way they took a certain amount of radium into their systems.

Seeking redress against the company for which they had worked, the women found that the statute of limitation had expired; that they could not hold the company responsible unless the suits were filed within two years after the cause of the accident.

In this instance the symptoms did not develop for seven years. Raymond Berry, Newark attorney employed by the plaintiffs, then attempted to enjoin the radium corporation from employing the statute of limitation. There has been one hearing on that injunction a month ago. Then the case was continued to Sept. 28, because of a crowded docket.

At the hearing several physicians testified that the five plaintiffs were dying, that nothing could be done for them, that their bones were being eaten away and that probably within a year their bodies would be so devastated that they could live no longer.

Vice Chancellor Backes, who granted the postponement, was astounded at the helplessness of science to save the women, but said the docket was so crowded that he could not put the case ahead of September.

According to Berry, 13 of the 70 women who worked with his clients between 1917 and 1920 already have died of radium poisoning.

The damage suit by which Berry hopes to gain redress seeks a cash settlement of $250,000 for each of the five women "to comfort and maintain them to the last days of their lives."

Despite the many recent price cuts there still must be an excess profit in the automobile industry. Several days ago Walter P. Chrysler of the Chrysler Automobile Company, purchased a luxurious cruiser at the cost of $150,000. Some time after that, not to be outdone the Fisher Brothers, one of the Cadillac Company and the second of Fisher Body Corporation fame, purchased a yacht double the cost of Chrysler's. The yacht must be supplanting the automobile as a means of commuting.

New means and methods of warfare are constantly being invented or revised so as to be practical and capable of being used in time of war. The most recent innovation is a camera, which is designed to photograph areas as large as four miles square from an altitude of 30,000 feet or more. The camera has been built for the United States Army Air Corps and will receive its first experimental tests within the next two weeks. The camera in theory seems to be practical and the actual tests will be made as soon as possible. One of the devices on the camera is an electrical heating system which will prevent the shutter from freezing even when exposed to extreme weather conditions.

Mother's Day, which was celebrated Sunday, May 12, as a part of the national event, is one of the most popularized of the annual legal celebrations. The day became a part of the War Department observance in 1925, when special festivities were held all over the country on the Sunday in May. Mothers have always been revered and held on a higher plane than any other person and this is as it should be. With the day becoming more and more in vogue each year, people are realizing to a greater extent the wonderful part that mothers really play in the world.

MOVIE COMEDIANS TURN WARFARE TO LAUGHST

A city is steeped in crime and two underworld gangs engage in deadly warfare because one band had encroached upon the other's territory. Wallace Berry and Raymond Hatton are on the trail of the crooks!

That is the situation in "Partners in Crime," the Paramount melodramatic comedy which opens at the Vancast Theatre tonight.

They have sailed the seas, the imitatable Berry and Hatton. They have scaled the Alps, braved the terrors of the trenches, and made the world happier for fire insurance writers but they have never before been as funny as they are as the nemesis of the underworld.

For the first time since they have been starred as team comedians Berry and Hatton are provided in "Partners in Crime," with a straight melodramatic story. A story teeming in thrills, abounding in humorous situations and with an interesting love theme woven through it. Berry takes the part of a dud detective and Hatton plays dual roles; those of a wise-cracking newspaper reporter and a savage gang leader. The stars do not clown or wear ludicrous costumes in this picture. The story furnishes plenty of laughs in legitimate situations and Berry and Hatton make the most of the comedy possibilities.

SYNOPSIS
Discharged from the police force when found off beat, Danny Malone takes a job as a trucker with a firm he suspects is working hand in hand with a band of silk thieves. The note which took him from his boat while the Dayton warehouse were raided he knows was written by his long missing brother, Dicky, and he hopes to find him and rescue him from Bull Savage's gang. Danny's sweetheart, Mary Gillen, and Jimmy Wells, a newspaper reporter, learn that Alfred J. Ston, Jr., is working with the bandits. A secret night assignment accuses Danny's suspicions and he tips off Jimmy that the stolen will be to be secured. Jimmy promises to have the police ready and Danny calls in the location of the gang hangout.

"You're having a hell of a time," remarked Murphy.
Danny didn't have time to answer as the truck followed its leader into the open space in front of the dockside warehouse. There were big sliding wooden doors with room enough for two trucks to pass in at once. Outside were four big trucks of which there were no names. Apparently, thought Danny, these were the trucks belonging to the gang, and the reason for the lack of need for his second trip. As far as he could see the whole region was deserted. There wasn't even a taxi stand where he could put through a call. However, telephone wires were connected to the building and led to a point in the wall a little to the right of the main entrance. He marked the approximate position in his mind and determined to make an attempt to call from there.

They didn't have to wait long for their turn, and this time Danny was forced to do his share of the unloading. He and Murphy passed the piles out of the truck while a chain of men passed them to the back of the building. There a small door gave exit to the deck of a lighter and several more men were already transferring the stuff aboard of her.

From his position inside the truck Danny could see little of what was happening and not until the truck was unloaded was he able to look around. Danny's truck had passed one of the others on the way down, leaving two more to be unloaded. As Murphy pulled away from the position they had held the first of these trucks pulled in, blocking their way to the door.

Someone with a hoarse voice started cursing them for clumsy fools and suggested that seeing they were in the way they should get out and help with the rest. They were only too willing, but as Danny hit the floor he slipped behind a pillar. Murphy looked around for him, and seeing the warning look on Danny's face, took the hint and moved into the crowd.

Dan waited a moment to be sure that no one was watching him, bending as if to tie a shoe lace while he did so. Then, satisfied that, even if not actually unobserved, no one was paying more than cursory attention, he walked casually over the little room near the door. It was empty, and voicing a prayer that now if never before he would get some kind of service, he reached for the receiver. As he did so the door opened and someone spoke to him.

"Where's Bull?" they asked.
Danny looked around quickly and saw that the intruder was Alfred Dayton. Realizing that it would be suicide to appear discontented he tried to cram all the nonchalance in the world into one sentence, accompanying it with another prayer.

"Don't know, somewhere front when I saw him last."
Then as Dayton moved away he lifted the receiver from the hook. One of his prayers was answered. The operator was ready and within twenty seconds he was connected with the city desk of the world. Hastily he gave them the address of the warehouse and added that the utmost haste would be necessary. Then as an afterthought.

"Tell Wells that Dayton's here, and for God's sake have him hurry."
Coming out of the hut, Danny ran into the guard whom Bull had posted in the front of the building. "Where the hell did you come from?" he asked.
"Lookin' for some matches."

diana screen. Anna Chang, diminutive oriental singer, Chief Tui Poi and his Royal Samoans, the Felicia Sorrell Girls, Moore and Powell, Drena Beach and many others make up "Hula Blues," one of the outstanding Public shows of the year.

answered Danny, realizing that it sounded lame enough.
"Yer can't smoke in here. Who are yer anyway?"
"I'm with one of the Larson trucks," Danny decided to bluff it out. "I've got my stuff off an it you think I'm goin' to do all the work around here you'd get another think comin'."

"Come off it," he snarled. "this ain't no job to lie down on. Get on the job and jump or we'll see who's boss around here."

Danny was out of that mess but to prevent suspicion he had to join the gang handling the silk. The great drawback was that he only knew Bull Savage in the vaguest sort of way, whereas Bull probably had seen him a dozen times. However there was only one thing to do. Just trust to luck, and hope that Jimmy had made correct arrangements with the police.

About fifteen minutes passed rapidly with no one having time enough to pay much attention to the person next to him. A high wind on the river was making the lighter misbehave and Bull spent ten minutes of this time over-seeing the removing of the barge. When he returned the last bale was off the truck and the men stood around talking while it was put in its place.

Danny and Murphy stood together talking softly. Murphy knew that something was in the wind and he was dying to get in on it. The truck just unloaded was backing out and Murphy left him to clamber into the driver's seat on their own. The movement left Danny standing some feet apart from the left and subject to more than casual notice. Also it gave him a chance to look around the building. Two things he saw that he had not noticed before. One, the machine guns, mounted so as to cover the doorways, the other, a pale faced boy who looked strangely familiar.

Instinctively, Danny knew that he was his brother and he could not completely smother an exclamation of surprise. The suspense of the last half hour had driven other thoughts out of his mind.

Now he wondered how he would get Dick out of this mess alive and at the same time carry out his mission. While these thoughts were flying through his head he forgot to be on guard and more than one of the crowd around him heard the muffled exclamation and caught his glance riveted on Dick.

Bull was among that number and he turned towards Danny with a muttered oath.
"Who the hell have we got here?" he snarled. Then as Danny moved the light from one of the lamps shone fairly on his face.

"Danny," exclaimed Dick.
"That damned cop," roared Bull. Murphy came tumbling out of his seat as Danny leaped for Bull's throat. Two quick blows and a pair of gangsters crashed to the floor, one of them with his gun half drawn. Murphy made a dive for this run, knowing that he stood no chance without one and little enough with. As he bent down Sparky pressed the trigger of his automatic and kept it there until the hammer fell on an empty chamber.

Murphy had paid the highest price for his excitement, yet died making the greatest gesture that one man can make for another. Danny was safe from gunfire. He had managed to jump Bull and get hold of his throat and right hand before he had a chance to get to his gun. Bull staggered backwards and both of them went flying over a bale of silk. The shock of the fall broke Danny's hold on the throat of his opponent but luckily he fell underneath Bull so that Sparky and his friends were unable to come to their leader's assistance.

Dick was standing motionless, his face white as a sheet, his teeth tightly clinched. To do him justice he was waiting his opportunity. Hoping that something would happen that would enable him to terminate the life of the man that he hated more than he could even think.

Incubating the Vacuum Tube

Out of the Ceaseless Efforts of Scientists and Research Engineers Must Come the Improvements That Make the Modern Vacuum Tube What It Is.

By DR. ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH
Chief Broadcast Engineer, Radio Corporation of America.

It is said that every bridge exists first in the mind of the civil engineer before it is hung across the river.

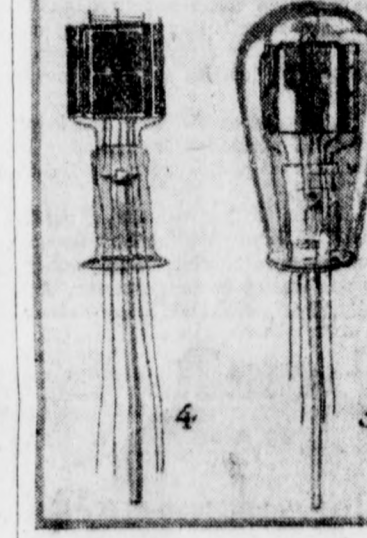

Dr. A. N. Goldsmith

Likewise, a skyscraper exists in the mind of its architect long before the site is cleared and the caissons are driven down to bedrock. Again, every great painting or statue is conceived in its ideal perfection by the artist's fertile mind long before it is realized in material form.

And so it is with radio—an achievement in practical form never comes until long after patient and inspired scientists and research engineers have dreamt of new physical principles and methods, followed by tireless experimenting until, despite all discouragements, they have achieved the chosen goal of a newer and a better way of accomplishing that which is most needed in the progress of radio.

Now at least three conditions must be met in order that a suitable product shall reach the ultimate consumer. First, there must be available the undivided services of learned men, with long experience and marked capacity for research, thoroughly acquainted with the problems, and with the determination, knowledge and inspiration to develop new things and methods. But even the great scientists cannot make bricks without straw. They require elaborate facilities in the way of apparatus and assistants, so that the second point is the material, as the French would say, quite as much as the personnel. Thirdly, there is need for the co-ordination of all research and developmental efforts with those of production which must follow for a successful consummation of the process. In this connection it is noted that so vast is the scope of modern science that no one can do more than to polish one facet of the diamond of scientific knowledge. Left to themselves, the labors of many qualified scientists might be lost either through needless and expending duplication of efforts on the same problem or through the failure to co-ordinate their activities so as to cover every portion of the field and to explore every nook and cranny of the unsolved problems.

Organized Scientific Research

It is just here that the great industrial organizations come into their own in the field of applied science. It is in this connection that these great organizations can render a real service to society. These huge organizations, because of the very magnitude of their operations, can afford to provide elaborate facilities, can place problems before leading scientists, can assign each task to the right man, can co-ordinate efforts so that all parts of a given problem will be covered with the simultaneous and co-ordinated efforts of specialists. What is still more significant, these great industrial organizations can afford to continue year after year, despite discouragements, setbacks and long and costly delays, until the final outcome, be it successful or otherwise. Smaller organizations obviously cannot afford to stand the grueling tests of patience, with its terrific cost, which is part and parcel of pioneer development.

Now in no other portion of the field of radio are research and development so important as in the radiotron or vacuum tube. Consider, for example, the work of Dr. Irving Langmuir, who is known throughout the world for his scientific achievements. You are not likely to find Dr. Langmuir in his Schenectady research laboratory placing vacuum tubes in a receiving set nor again studying the characteristics of tubes with an array of meters. To others must go those practical tasks—tasks far down the long line of research and development. It is more probable that you will find Dr. Langmuir studying a new piece of apparatus for investigating the behavior of the invisible electron, the atom or even larger molecule, or again of films of oil floating on the surface of water, or still again the physical behavior of elaborate chemical compounds, or once more the nature of light emitted by some glowing vapor. These and many other apparently academic subjects—academic today, practical tomorrow—are most likely to call for the attention and interest of this great scientist. Yet in time these seemingly abstract studies become important features of your vacuum tubes or radiotrons and provide for still better radio results.

An "Electric Sponge" Turning from the general to the specific, there is the dry battery radiotron. The filament of this tube as well as that of the leading storage battery tubes, is based upon what might logically be termed an electric sponge. Instead of chemically pure metallic tungsten, with its high operating temperature, relatively limited life and high cost of operation, there has been produced thoriated tungsten in which tiny fragments of the rare element thorium are scattered throughout the tungsten while it is in powdered form and before it has been swaged and sintered and drawn out into filament wire one-half a thousandth of an inch in diameter. Now thorium has the peculiar property when heated of pouring forth a flood of electrical particles or electrons. It is, however, mechanically unsuited for filament use by itself. It would melt too easily for one thing. However, by placing the thorium in diffused form in the tungsten a filament of better mechanical and thermal properties is obtained while still retaining the electronic proclivities of thorium.

Radiotron Standard Tube

The thorium in the thoriated tungsten filament forms a layer of really unimagined thinness on the filament. This layer or film is very quickly driven off, but the heat just as quickly boils out fresh thorium to the surface, there to form a fresh coating. And so it goes. The action is much like that of a sponge soaked with water which, reaching the surface, evaporates by the heat of the sun, yet the sponge all the while is being squeezed just enough to keep the surface constantly moistened with a fresh supply of water.

There is much that the present day vacuum tube owes to Dr. Irving Langmuir, as well as other scientists and research engineers who work in research laboratories devoted to vacuum tube development. It was Dr. Langmuir who in the course of his investigations of the so-called "Edison effect" in incandescent lamps found that as the vacuum was made higher and higher the available electronic emission from the hot filament became steadily greater until finally when a vacuum tube was immersed in liquid air giving an extremely high vacuum the emission was ten thousand times its original value. This was an astonishing result, but when the experiments were repeated with another lot of filament wire no such increase in emission developed.

In conclusion, it is evident that the really good vacuum tube has a pedigree that extends back to the research laboratory. It has been fathered by scientists of note. Its infancy has been spent in the laboratory; its childhood has been passed in the testing laboratory at the hands of none too kind skeptics. Its youth has been devoted to production in the target tube factories in the world, and in the prime of life it is ready to render the service which will bring credit to its sponsors.

TWINE, COAL IS BOUGHT BY LOTS.

During the past three years, Indiana farmers have purchased millions of pounds of binder twine through the Indiana farm bureau purchasing department, thus securing their supply in quantity lots and saving thousands of dollars.
Efficiency on the farm and lower costs of production are necessary in this era, if profits are to be had in farming.
Coal is another item that is purchased in large quantities by members of the farm bureau. Last season, which started in early summer, over

one thousand carloads of mostly Kentucky coal was purchased and distributed throughout the farming section of Indiana. Orders for coal are coming into the office of the purchasing department this season. 15,000 tons of fertilizers were purchased cooperatively this spring by farm bureau members as against 7,000 tons in the spring of 1927.

She united with the Manhattan

Her home was at all times a home for the pastors of her church while serving her community.

She was also a member of the

of the Eastern Star for both of which she was a true and faithful worker.

She was a member of one of the

all of the joys that came to this life
as well as the privations that enter into every life that was good and constantly grew better and sweeter
as the years came and went.

The companionship of this one that has left behind, was beautiful and no less was the love and watchfulness

of this mother for her children.

The family circle was first broken on November 29, 1919 in the loss of William Elmer Long, and now our mother and grandmother.

She was faithful and devoted to her community and to all her associates. Her life was one of joy and but few shadows seemed to cross. Yesterday was Mother's day and our mother's birthday and the poem so recently read is a fitting tribute to our departed mother.

"The bravest battle that ever was
fought,
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not,
'Twas fought by the mothers of men"

"Not with cannon or battle shot,
With sword or nobler pen,
Not with eloquent word or thought
From the wonderful minds of men"
"But deep in a walled-up woman's heart,
A woman that would not yield:
But, bravely and patiently bore her past."

"Lo! There is the battle field."
"Wo! Ye with banners and battle shot,
With soldiers to shout and praise,
I tell you the Kingliest battles
fought
Are fought in these silent ways."

BLOCK CROOKED PROMOTERS

By W. R. MOREHOUSE

Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

(This is one of a series of articles exposing the wiles of sharpers who are after your money.)

MANY reliable corporations, firms and individuals are engaged in developing mining properties, drilling for possible new oil wells and promoting new inventions and enterprises. On the other hand many unreliable persons are ostensibly engaged in the same pursuits, but in reality are only promoting frauds. Therefore, every investor should first divide the sheep from the goats before he hazards his savings. Because there are many dishonest manipulators using mining, oil, invention and promotion terms to deceive does not mean that all promoters in these fields are crooked. The truth is, there are many trustworthy men engaged in promoting enterprises that are honest investments. The problem is to know the difference between promoters of the reliable type and the high-pressure variety. The former are engaged in legitimate business. The other group is engaged in fleeing the public.

The number of those who deliberately scheme to defraud is large and they are shrewd and deceitful. For this reason those who cannot afford to lose their savings should not trust entirely to their own judgment in making investments.

In order to divide the sheep from the goats—to distinguish between reliable and unreliable promoters, to tell the good investments from the worthless—the inexperienced investor should consult his banker or let the National Better Business Bureau, whose headquarters are in New York City, advise him. It costs nothing to get such advice from either source. It is safe to say that if those who have lost their savings through fraudulent schemes had followed this simple course they would still be in possession of their money.

Get the Facts
Invariably, get the facts and take no substitute. There is nothing better and nothing just as good as the facts
when it comes to withdrawing your savings from the bank and investing them. The facts about an investment either strengthen its position or show
it up to be risky—often times too risky
for the person who cannot afford to lose.

Good Advice
that Prevented
Disaster

New schemes to defraud are being hatched daily. The unscrupulous promoter never sleeps but is continuously plotting new methods of attack on the savers' hard-earned accumulations. The liberties he takes with the law and the schemes
he designs for belittling the sound advice of responsible persons makes it even more essential for investors to
get the facts.

Remember that anything that is worth investing in is worth knowing about as to its safety, its income, and its marketability. Any investment which is enshrouded by a screen of glowing promises or is so complicated that neither you nor your banker can fathom it and get the hard facts isn't an investment you can afford to put your money into.

Make it an unbreakable rule to get all the facts, whether the investment be large or small, and you will save yourself the heartaches and bitter disappointment of losing your savings.
Millions of dollars which have unfortunately been lost through poor investment might have been saved if the investors had taken time to investigate before investing. There is always need for capital in safe, honest business and so great is the legitimate demand for investors' funds that not one cent need be wasted by them on fraudulent schemes.

Don't Trade Good for Bad Don't exchange your investments for (A future article will tell of more schemes by which people are defrauded of their savings.)

BROKE UP ILLINOIS RING IN BATTLE FOR CLEAN POLITICS

Rodney H. Brandon, internationally known authority on child welfare, executive secretary of the Loyal Order of Moose and builder of Mooseheart, is the man who broke the backbone of the Small-Thompson-Crowe political machine in Chicago and Illinois in one of the greatest battles ever waged for clean politics. His generalship won for Louis L. Emmerson by an unprecedented plurality the Republican nomination for governor over Len Small. He defeated one of the most formidable political rings in history as an exponent of the higher ideals in politics and without the assistance of any "slush fund."

Mr. Brandon has been heard in practically every city in the country
on child welfare and crime prevention. In 1926 he was sent to Europe by the United States Government as an investigator on child welfare, and in 1927 was the American delegate to the Child Welfare Congress
at Havana.

With the firm conviction that the people of Illinois wanted to be freed from the political machine which had brought Chicago and the state into disrepute locally and nationally, he waged a campaign that has attracted national attention. Already Mr. Brandon is spoken of as a possible chairman of the National Republican committee to manage the coming presidential campaign
and in some quarters it is surmised

Rodney H. Brandon
that his name may come before the national convention as a nominee for president.
